OPEC alliance considers delay to its output hike, but faces a U.S. shale industry 'itching to drill again'

LONDON — Oil-producing group OPEC, and its allies, will likely delay an output hike at its meeting this week as it weighs positive vaccine news against new coronavirus lockdowns and resurgent shale drilling in the U.S. The coalition known as OPEC+, which comprises some of the world's largest crude producers, will begin a two-day meeting Monday to discuss the next phase of its production policy. It agreed to the largest single output cut in history back in April, but that reduction of 9.7 million barrels per day was subsequently scaled back to 7.7 million in August. Taking oil off the market, with OPEC kingpin Saudi Arabia often bearing the brunt, usually boosts crude prices and helps their commodity-focused economies...

Workshop on assessment of risks of money laundering and financing of terrorism kicks off

Khartoum, Nov.29 (SUNA)-The preparatory workshop for the national assessment on risks resulting from money laundering and financing of terrorism crimes has kicked off at Police Club in Burri suburb of Khartoum. The Prime Minister's Advisor for Economic Affairs, Dr. Adam Hiraka, said during addressing the workshop that the country is in need for regional and international cooperation in the field of exchanging information between Sudan and a number of the region's countries. This he said would help to uncover all activities and the suspected financial transactions at the backdrop of the big money flow outside the legal channels that includes smuggling of minerals, goods and and looted funds outside the country that should be returned to achieve.
