Oil rises nearly 3% as U.S. presidential election looms

NEW YORK (Reuters) - Oil prices gained nearly 3% on Monday, rebounding from several day of losses built on concerns of rising coronavirus cases, one day before the end of U.S. presidential election voting. The oil market has been under pressure, due to concerns about weaker fuel demand as several European countries restarted lockdowns to curb the coronavirus. Infections recently hit a daily record in the United States as well, and major oil trading merchants believe it could stall out the recovery in demand. Brent crude LCOc1 gained $1.03, or 2.7%, to settle at $38.97 a barrel. U.S. West Texas Intermediate CLc1 ended $1.02, or 2.9%, higher at $36.81 a barrel. Both contracts fell more than $2 earlier in the session, but rebounded strong factory.
