Blinken warns Iran could be on course to have enough fuel for nuclear weapon within 'weeks'

Source

INDEPENDENT

In his first major interview as Secretary of State, Antony Blinken repeated his warning that Iran could be on course to get enough fissile material to build a nuclear weapon within months, adding that if Iran continues to lift restraints from the nuclear deal, it could be "a matter of weeks". Speaking to NBC News, Mr Blinken said the US would be willing to once again comply with the 2015 nuclear deal if Iran does the same, saying that the US would then work on a "longer and stronger" deal with allies which could include other issues, including Iran's development of advanced missile technology and its deployment of armed groups throughout the Middle East. Mr Blinken avoided giving a clear answer when asked if the release of detained Americans...
